

Abstract

A system including at least one electronic component and a battery check circuit. When a power consumption level of the at least one electronic component is increased, the battery check circuit determines whether to provide power from a battery to the at least one 5 electronic component by comparing a power level of the battery to a first power level.